Bach typically used sixteenth notes in the accompaniment against quarter notes in the melody – a ratio of 4-against-1. With his ability to juggle musical motives, he could weave a consistent motive through the harmony from the previous two examples. And Bach was able to do this all in his head while improvising!

This is an age old conundrum among musicians and performers. When playing Bach, should you prefer legato or staccato? For those uninitiated in musical terminology, Legato (Italian for "tied together") is defined, in Wikipedia, as "legato indicates that musical notes are played together. That is, in transitioning from note to note, there should be no intervening silence."...
