The Predator family is designed to minimize felt recoil. These pistols have a full-length guide rod and a coned (wafered), match grade barrel that helps control muzzle flip. With the Predator barrel system, the recoil that you do feel is low and the shot recovery time is much faster than any traditional 1911 with a bushing barrel.

With the Predator II's contemporary barrel system, the recoil is significantly decreased and shot recovery time is much swifter than any traditional sized commander with a bushing barrel. To top it all off, Nighthawk has incorporated their Tri-Cavity Adjustable trigger that breaks crisply and cleanly.

When Nighthawk Custom set out to build the lowest recoiling 1911, we chose the Predator pistol with its five-inch coned, match grade barrel and full-length guide rod. Next, we added a thinned down, 25 lpi checkered frame, flattened mainspring housing, thin grips, and completed the package with a wide, but tasteful, magwell.
