It has been fascinating to immerse myself in the Look Magazine collection's representations of women on the road. The photograph above, of two women in a red convertible speeding along the Florida Keys, is from a travel article in Look Magazine from January 1954. I have also been exploring the rich photography of Carol Highsmith, and in particular her aesthetic of the road, present in the immense collection she donated to the Library of Congress. Her series of photos of roadside art and ...
