Textual analysis is the most important method in literary studies. Almost all work in this field involves in-depth analysis of texts – in this context, usually novels, poems, stories or plays. Because it deals with literary writing, this type of textual analysis places greater emphasis on the deliberately constructed elements of a text: for example, rhyme and meter in a poem, or narrative perspective in a novel.

other "textual studies" people on one side, and interpreters ("literary critics" as some would still call themselves) on the other. A lot of the members of both groups are dismissive of (or flat-out hostile to) the other. Many of the things that need to be said are glaringly obvious to one side but not to the other — and this cuts both ways.
